Medieval Drama

Donald Bevington, Editor
University of Chicago

This anthology is by far the most extensive and representative collection of medieval drama available. Coverage is completely thorough and comprehensive, covering the period up to the early Renaissance. Included are liturgical dramas, the Corpus Christi Cycle, saints' plays and conversion plays, morality plays, and humanist dramas. All play texts are complete, unexpurgated, and are in medieval English spelling. An extensive selection of Latin liturgical texts is contained, many never before available in translation. The text is single column (except for Latin and French texts with parallel translation.) Single word glosses and notes are at the foot of the page, and brief headnotes are given to provide a running history of the drama of the Middle Ages.

1975 ISBN O 395 13915 5 Cloth 1200 pages £10.95

The Riverside Shakespeare

Gwynne Blakemore Evans, Editor
Harvard University

This new collection of the works of Shakespeare is the only genuinely complete one-volume edition since, for the first time, both The Two Noble Kinsmen and the Shakespearean scenes from The Booke of Sir Thomas More are included. The text itself is completely re-edited with modern punctuation and spelling yet sensitively retains the rhythms and modulations of the Elizabethan voice. The plays are arranged in the traditional order of the First Folio, with explanatory notes located below each column of text, and bibliographical and textual notes grouped at the end of each work. Immediate explanations of vocabulary are therefore available, while those who desire further information will find full treatment of their particular interests in a separate section.

Allen Lane Theatre Monographs
General Editor: Irving Wardle

Allen Lane plan to launch this major new series in the Spring of 1976. Its chief aim is to provide for the student of drama inexpensive and well-illustrated monographs on key figures and movements of the modern theatre, extending over a period from the rise of the naturalist movement in the 1870's to the present. The first three titles will be The Theatre of Antonin Artaud by Albert Bermel, Piscator and Political Theatre by John Willett and Roger Planchon by Michael Kustow.

The New Theatre Magazine is devoted to the task of reassessing the relationship between the subject of drama at the university and the repertory theatre. Located in university towns the repertory theatre enjoys both an interested, critical audience and permanent financial support. In return university drama should profit from repertory's professional advice. Both repertory theatre and the university are an essential part of the community and as such this publication aims at underscoring their close collaboration. The staff on the New Theatre Magazine embraces graduate and undergraduate members of the Green Room Society of the Drama Department of the University of Bristol. It contains articles by leading dramatists and directors.

At a time when drama was being too much written about and too little experienced directly, Gambit was established to meet the necessity of redressing the balance by making original works accessible. It publishes full texts of major new plays as well as forgotten works from all over the world (foreign language dramas have been translated into English). Later numbers include previews of forthcoming productions in London and other major cities, reviews of the more exciting or controversial new plays, and 'declarations' by people dedicated or opposed to the theater of today.
